Question 1

In the chocolate industry, four large-scale organisations dominate the market, collectively accounting for 92% of all chocolate sales. Currently these four organisations compete on price. The smallest of the four organisations, Websters, is less able to take advantage of economies of scale than the three larger organisations. As a result, Websters has decided to focus on competing on quality rather than price to ensure its long-term success.

Sam Webster, grandson of the founder of the business, is currently the CEO and has identified that numerous changes must be made.

As the focus of Websters shifts to quality, it will need to measure quality as part of its operations management. A human resources audit has identified that the current staff do not have the necessary capabilities to implement this change. To allow the staff to develop the necessary capabilities, Mr Webster has identified two preferred options.

- improve the capabilities of the current staff
- purchase and import state-of-the-art equipment from Belgium

While the purchase of equipment will be more expensive initially, it will improve productivity and reduce waste and carbon emissions in the longer term.

Glass Transport is a long-established bulk transport provider, which has recently taken a decision to invest in becoming a national parcel delivery service. The opportunity that CEO Catherine Glass seized on arose from fast-growing online sales. In order to build the expanded business, a significant number of new staff will be required. Some of these staff could be relocated from the bulk transport division and some will need to be recruited. Service standards will need to be set and new vehicles purchased. Further decisions will be made to determine whether parcel pick-up from residential and business premises will be offered.

As Glass Transport is becoming more complex in its service offerings, Ms Glass is considering changing the management structure of her organisation.
